The story takes place in Brooklyn, NYC. Imagine this... put your self in June of 2005. Breathe in that air. Remember where you were, what music is playing, the clothes, put yourself in that scenery. If you're from Brooklyn inner city kid Fab is on the radio, the black album is still waving in the ears of the city, The Spurs just won the championships, you're either rocking State Property, Roca-Wear, Enyce, Sean John sweatsuits taking over the game, black art is peaking and it takes the imagination of the youth looking to make their way. It is June 2005, the players on set are Dino (all around ladies man, always looking to get into some action when it comes to the ladies, when it comes to truth or dare, don't expect him to say truth), Lowery (Young student of life, eager to explore, always asking question and provokes the status quo), Dub (Fashion designer, a seed planter, planting ideas of growth when the opportunity presents itself), Chris (The leader of the group, a young street hustler, ladies is his favorite past time, nothing gets between his cash flow), Core (A DJ Chris cousin, and manager to Prest, the heartbeat of the movement) Prest (Nyc's poet, a voice of his generation, voicing his reflection of the story of life through his perception), Fred (a mentor to the crew, a street hustler making his way for himself and his family. These characters are Brooklyn, the fashion, the attitude the vibe the feel, as much as they are a reflection of where they are from, that doesn't deter them from thriving to gain a rich and wealthy perception first hand. Fred is a vet in the streets- he lives it he breathes it. This mans spirit uplifts the team, he is realizing the drugs game isn't going to last forever, he puts a plan into motion with the help of the team to make that illegal bread into legal cash flow. With the talent of the Prest and Mac, Fred puts is energy into there talent to make a way out of the struggle.
